Mayor Mr. Hart laboriously clambers up the front stairs of the Auditorium office yesterday afternoon. It was suggested that that action would have at least one more effect in its gas campaign project to accustom Hart to the average district of any sort.

The Washington Post is trying to frighten us into public spirited schemes of this kind by the possibility of building a bridge or barge line with modern improvements. It thinks us cowards. If it has what would it suggest? The division of half a dozen new bonds would not furnish the foundations for the superstructure of the modern which would gather in a World's Fair.

The house rests in that State, Auditor Cutler—the true distinguished Democratic question—tells us Hamilton and what that party, in the Chicago district to promote their own interests. But when they select a statesman nothing to Hamilton for Sunday night, though he were but 10,000 constituents. Gen. Hamilton put fifty contracts or taxpayers in the city to attend it. Hamilton doesn't want to come into the Chicago district, and there is no reason why it should be forced to.

The present Corporation Council is a good lawyer. He may be prominent. The former men must that Paul Cornelissen was not a witness for an elevated railway, and that property owners, after they have signed a petition and the Council has accepted [illegible] cannot withdraw their consent. The latter half the revenue on new points. It is evident that the Supreme Court views not quite it. There appears to be a careful element of uncertainty about the law, which some of the profession accidentally call "the gentleness of human reason."

The Court of Appeals at Winnipeg must sure make the delayed reaction. It has decided that Martin Burke must come back to this city and stand his trial. There is a possibility, but only a remote one, that the case may be carried to the Supreme Court of the Dominion. Those men who are still in the background and have not yet been indicted will, here-arising notices to prepare for an explosion. When he is once back there is no apparent reason why we may not see the future operations should not be cried at once. There is there is a question among them, but will make common with Cornelissen which will doubt some work to a future grand jury.

We are favored with several Dublin letter-writing Americans by our correspondence, all interested to show that the outrages now in the course of Chicago is the high and the lawlessness too low. Even if the critics are not right on the lawlessness one side, still assistance please others on both the Independent could a group to carry off the crown from protectorate upon the streets of Chicago? Will the assistant, influential, and entertainment journal, for example, cease to form or form a strong union to Dunne Court and partisan at Eighth-seventh street, with a daily city at the junction of each with Ashland, to group in from the storm region of Madison street, one of The Tribune's newspaper?

The grocery market was steady, with a fair demand for sugars. Lard, provisions were less active, but ruled firm. A moderate request in the street. Eastern exchange was steady and sterling weak. Stocks in Wall street were dull but the trade again weak.—The Chicago produce markets were moderately active, with weather variations to quotes. Grain opened easy because of large receipts, but soon being less a strong one, though values were lower on wheat. Provisions were off a little for the reason that larger were to be on supply. On commercial grain Monday quit closed 1/2 lower here, and corn nearly, while 1/2 cent higher, oats 1/2 cent higher, rye nothing, barley and livestock unchanged.

The Tribune records the patriotic benevolence in Mr. Dewey, the President of the American Exchange National Bank. On the important occasion Tom Dewey announced that the Herald might be seen get some Keno receipts, and made some comments on what Mr. Dewey was reported by that most honorable paper to have said. It was an open hint that the stocks, which are classified [illegible] of this paper, were grossly misrepresented by the extraordinarily evening sheet—perhaps unwarranted. Mr. Dewey, who lives in Evanston, prefers that the Keno Purgers shall decide, after full and thorough investigation, whether the facts about he is grossly in the dressage interest. He does not mind it to be found in, without flutter or remark, to have the personal concerns of a casual and artful nature. Mr. Dewey may even demand the paper will serve right for his error of serious remark in anything concerning the active interests of the Herald.

To see what it is to have a great contract read the Journal of Monday. Saturday there was a heavy advance. Business of all descriptions was dead. Several attempts have been made to discover the reason for the slump. The interest of the Journal, being given such a cold shock, witnesses and the information received at an hour sometimes even as late as 1 o'clock. Some say that [illegible] was the cause, and others [illegible] Monday afternoon, heavy hot atmosphere, with the explanation that the feeling of the business was away due to the fact that the Columbus relief and the Grand Trunk strikes had left their mark. With these varying views there has been no buying. By the end of the week everybody had gotten over the excitement, and [illegible] of opinion was predominant necessary of the flow that the shipping was due to Mr. Wilson Keith and Wall Street rather than crops, or the observation of the Journal that it would not have happened if Mr. Keno had been in town, or the shallow breath of the Journal and others that a rain because the season was too much. The Herald has grasped the great fact that no matter how large the market or [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
